

To Prime Minister Turnbull and Minister Dutton,

I call on the Australian Government and Opposition to commit to immediately:

- Close the Regional Processing Centres on Nauru and Papua New Guinea.
- Bring all asylum seekers and refugees on Nauru and Manus Island to Australia immediately.
- Assess, in a fair and timely manner, those whose international protection applications have not been finalised by the authorities in Nauru and Papua New Guinea.
- Ensure that all those who were granted refugee status on Nauru and Manus have the right to settle in Australia.

The 2,200 people that the Australian Government has trapped on Nauru and Manus Island cannot wait for safety any longer. It's time to #BringThemHere.

Last year Amnesty's most senior researcher, Anna Neistat, visited Nauru and was recorded the great lengths the Australian Government is going to to deliberately inflict suffering on people seeking safety and to hide these abuses from the world. She said the Government had "designed a system of deliberate abuse" to deter people seeking safety who arrive by boat.

Many people trapped on Manus Island and Nauru suffer from serious mental health problems which are inadequately treated and exacerbated by the appalling conditions in which they're forced to live. Anxiety, self-harm and suicide attempts are frequent, with children as young as nine speaking openly about wanting to end their lives.
