

Dear Woolworths, Coles and Aldi,

I want to know that products I buy from your store do not contain child labour. I am a consumer who is seriously concerned that you do not have adequate human rights safeguards in place when purchasing products from big brand companies like Nestle, Unilever and Procter & Gamble.

I am particularly concerned about products using palm oil from Wilmar's palm oil plantations, as Amnesty International has uncovered child labour and worker's rights abuses on Wilmar plantations.

I hope you will be a leader for human rights and safeguard against child labour stocked on your shelves.

Palm Oil = Child Labour

Children as young as eight are doing back-breaking and dangerous work on palm oil plantations in Indonesia, all while the brands we know so well turn a profit in the billions.

The big brand companies are feeling the pressure but are not yet convinced. It's time to step up the pressure on Australia's largest supermarkets.

Woolworths, Coles and Aldi stock many of the household brands that contain palm oil, essentially green-lighting child labour and worker's rights abuses.

It's time Woolworths, Coles and Aldi stood up for what's right and customers are vital in making that happen.
